Learning Objectives

At the conclusion of the symposium, the participants should be able to:
1. Describe the advantages and disadvantages of digital mammography in diagnosis of breast cancer and differentiate the appropriate indications for using digital mammography in these cases.
2. Identify patients that are candidates for partial breast irradiation and subsequently appropriately refer those patients to providers in our system who can offer this service.
3. Discuss the impact that radiation has on breast reconstruction and anticipate which patients are not candidates for reconstruction due to a history of radiation or anticipated radiation treatment.
4. Discuss methods of tissue processing to optimize margin assessment for patients with Ductal Carcinoma in Situ (DCIS).
5. Identify criteria for hepatic resection/ablation in patients with breast cancer with liver metastases.
6. Describe applications for trastuzumab in the adjuvant and neoadjuvant setting.
7. Identify patients at increased risk of developing breast cancer and describe options for risk reduction in such patients.

Target Audience

General surgeons, radiologists, oncologists, plastic surgeons, psychiatrists, pathologists, geneticists and breast cancer coordinators. The symposium is open to other physicians interested in the treatment of breast cancer such as internal medicine, family medicine and gynecology. The symposium is open to community physicians and may also be of interest to radiation therapists and other allied health care professionals dealing with breast cancer patients and any other interested health care professionals.
